County awards plant maintenance contract to Halvard Industrial

By Marguerite Oyelaran · 14 March

Kettleburn County has awarded a five-year facilities and plant maintenance contract to Halvard Industrial Services, a Kettleburn firm that has operated in the county since 2009. The contract covers routine maintenance at the Lattimer Road water treatment plant and janitorial services at the county administration building on Calloway Street.

Halvard Industrial Services employs roughly 140 people and is headquartered at 1140 Rennard Way in the Kettleburn industrial park. Its chief executive, Vernon Haight, founded the company after two decades in commercial plant services.

“We have crews in most of the public buildings in this county already,” Haight said. “This consolidates work we were doing under four separate purchase orders.”

Della Kroft, the company's chief operating officer, said the contract would add eleven positions, most of them on the night shift. Field operations for the county work will be run by Miles Trombley, who joined Halvard Industrial in 2019 as director of field operations.

The county's purchasing office said two other firms bid. Rosalind Pike, Halvard Industrial's vice president for compliance, confirmed the company had completed the background screening the county requires for contractors with access to water infrastructure.

The Lattimer Road plant serves about 38,000 residents. County commissioners approved the award 4–1.
